

Authors

Edward W. Taylor, is Professor of Adult Education at Penn State Harrisburg. He received his Ed.D. in Adult Education from the University of Georgia. He recently published two co-edited books: Handbook of Transformative Learning: Theory, Research and Practice and Adult Education in Cultural Institutions: Aquariums, Libraries, Museums, Parks, and Zoos. His recent areas of research include exploring: transformative learning among farmer education programs in sub-saharan Africa, survey development assessing transformative learning, and medical education in clinical settings.

Zygmunt Bauman, is Professor Emeritus of Sociology at the University of Leeds. Bauman is one of the world's most eminent social theorists writing on issues as diverse as modernity and the Holocaust, postmodern consumerism and liquid modernity. He is the author of some 21 books in English and of numerous articles and reviews.

Monica Fedeli, is Associate Professor at the Department of Philosophy, Sociology, Education and Applied Psychology of University of Padova. She received her PhD in Pedagogy and Education from the same University. She recently published articles and papers on Self Directed Learning, Personalization of Didactic and University Business Dialogue. She is Principal Investigator of a National Research Project called Emp&Co, employability and competences with the aim of developing new opportunities for young people entering the labor market. Her research Areas include didactics, methodology, teaching and learning and survey in the field of the quality of teaching and learning in Higher Education. She is working with international research groups on the theme of personalization of learning in formal, non-formal and informal contexts.

Daniela Frison, has got a PhD in Educational Sciences at the University of Padua. Her area of research is on University-Business Cooperation, methods and tools to support adult learning. Since 2012 she has been working as post-doctoral research fellow at the Department of Philosophy, Sociology, Education and Applied Psychology and since 2008 she has been leading PARIMUN project, which aims at developing intervention-researches analysing business needs and carried out by graduating students in Educational Sciences.

Anna Serbati, earned a PhD in Educational Sciences at the University of Padua and she is post-doctoral research fellow at the Department of Philosophy, Sociology, Education and Applied Psychology, Padua University with a research on teacher professional development and academic educational innovation. Her field of specialization is the research on adult learning with a specific focus on processes and tools for the assessment and certification of competences acquired in formal, non-formal and informal contexts. In this area of research, she published articles and book chapters and she presented paper in international conferences. She coordinated research projects concerning design and delivery of academic curricula and methods and tools for identification and certification of competences; she has been European consultant within Tuning Russia and she is collaborating in the Tuning EU-US Study.

Francesco Lo Presti, Assistant Professor at the Department of Motor Sciences, “Parthenope” University of Naples (Italy); he has been scientific coordinator of guidance intervention in the S.E.NE.C.A. Project, Italian Ministry of Education, University and Research, National Operative Program-Guidance Action; he teaches social pedagogy at the “Parthenope” University of Naples. He has participated in national and international projects of Italian Ministry of Education, University and Research: (2005-2008) INTERLINK “Programmes for the promotion of the process of internationalization of the university system”; (2006-2009) PRIN; (2003-2006) FIRB. The research activities refers to educational research methodology with a specific focus on reflective practice. Research interests are identity construction processes, Guidance, Narrative Analysis and narrative methods.

Anna Dalla Rosa, Bachelor’s Degree in Work and Social Psychology at University of Padua. At present, she is Ph.D. Student in Social Psychology and Personality at FISPPA, University of Padua. Her main research interests regard e-learning, organizational processes, like leadership and calling, and application of implicit social cognition.

Elisa Maria Galliani, is Assistant Professor of work and organizational psychology since 2006. Her current research interests are focused on longitudinal analysis of vocational calling and of the relationships between work-family conflict and enrichment.

Michelangelo Vianello, is Assistant Professor of work and organizational psychology since 2007. His current research interests are focused on the reproducibility of psychological effects, on the development and evolution of vocational calling, and on implicit measures of self-concept.

Barbara Barbieri, PhD., is Assistant Professor at the Department of Social & Developmental Psychology Sapienza University of Rome. Her main research interests regard employment support and psychological well-being, entrepreneurship, intervention models and organizational analysis, training and career guidance.

Giordana Szpunar, PhD, is Assistant Professor at the Department of Department of Social and Developmental Psychology of Sapienza University of Rome. Her research areas include relationship between theory and practice in education and education to reflective thinking, university internship and reflective practice, prejudice and stereotype in education.

Loretta Fabbri, is Full Professor of Didactics and Organizational Research Methodology at the University of Siena. She is Director of Department of Education, Humanities and Intercultural Communication of Arezzo. She is delegated of the Dean for the Lifelong Learning Activities. Her research field focuses on issues related to participative learning methods and knowledge building in professional communities of practices.

Claudio Melacarne, is Associate Professor of Social Pedagogy at the University of Siena. His research activities is focused on educational research methodology, reflective approach in adult education and organizational development. He works as consultant with private and public organizations. His research interests is actually focused on the conditions to promote transformative learning and to plan educational setting in formal and informal contexts.

Stefano Bonometti is Researcher of Didactics at the University of Molise. He is professor of Methodologies of group work. His research is focused on learning process in workplace, Action Learning, Expansive Learning Theory and the relationship between learning and new technologies.

Giovanna del Gobbo, PhD., is Assistant Professor, from 2009 till now, in the Department of Education and Psychology, University of Florence (Italy). She teaches Social Pedagogy and Human Development in course of Science of Adult Educational and Continuing Education. She deals with Environmental and Heritage Pedagogy and Participatory Methodologies for Research and Adult Education.

Francesca Torlone, Ph.D., is a researcher at the Department of Education and Psychology, University of Florence (Italy) since 2006. She has been carrying out research and project planning and coordination activities both at a national and transnational level in the fields of institutional learning, lifelong learning policies, guidance, training, education and labour market. She has been member of the working group on Adult Learning of the European Commission, General Direction Education and Culture. Her scientific interests are related to the training needs analysis of individuals, teams and organizations, and the learning process that is strictly linked to that (including training design, development, implementation and evaluation).

Vanna Boffo, PhD., is Associate Professor the Department of Education and Psychology, University of Florence (Italy). She teaches General Pedagogy in the Primary Teachers Training Degree Course and in the Bachelor of Arts of Nursing. She is the coordinator of the European Master in Adult Education at the University of Florence and she is involving in some European Projects on the relations between the Higher Education and the Professionalization. Her main research lines emphasize Work Pedagogy, with a particular sight to the contents of job placement and guidance, and the Care Relationships in the workplaces, both in the nursing contexts and in the care services.